9 INSTRUCTIONS AND EXAMPLES

9.1 Fees for asset management and asset safekeeping services

Fees, payments and compensation for asset management and asset safekeeping services (such as account management fee for a book-entry account, and rental for a safe deposit box) must be reported. This also concerns the Central Securities Depository of Finland (APK) if it has provided asset management and account operator services to its clients. The reportable information covers natural persons who are Finnish tax residents and estates of deceased persons.

However, compensation relating to brokerage, sales and purchases of securities (also known as courtage) is not considered paid for asset management and asset safekeeping services. The separate VSAPUUSE information return has been designed for reporting such compensation including the reporting of purchase and selling prices for purposes of calculating capital gains and losses.

Similarly, fees for management and safekeeping of common-fund assets that have not specifically invoiced from the unitholders for this purpose are not considered fees for asset management and safekeeping services. But firms engaging in individual asset management services must report their clients' payments collected for asset management and safekeeping.

If your client (an individual taxpayer) has an equity savings account, and a different deposit account than the one connected to the equity savings account is where you charge the related fees for asset management/safekeeping from this client, you must submit this annual information return (VSOMHOIE) in order to inform the Tax Administration of the amounts paid to you.

As provided in § 54.2, Income Tax Act, taxpayers are entitled to deductions, against their capital incomes, for amounts exceeding €50 during the taxable year, paid for the management and safekeeping of their securities, book-entry shares and comparable assets. The €50-de minimis standard has been established in order to also cover the part that includes a tax-exempt portion of the assets or the income derived from them. The de minimis of €50 must be counted separately for each taxpayer.

Report the payments and fees without subtracting the €50 from them. Report all the asset management and safekeeping costs. You are not expected to specify them in categories (such as rental cost for a safe deposit box etc.).

Use the cash basis instead of the accrual basis: report the amounts for the year when they were paid. Report the total for the entire year; do not break the amounts down to smaller installments. If payment was made in another currency, you must make a foreign-exchange conversion: use the European Central Bank rate of the date of payment in order to convert it to €.

9.2 Identity detail

This data element is used whenever the same client, identified by the same Business ID is included in more than one reporting items, and the situation may necessitate additional information, i.e. a detail for identifying the client. Example: Identity details must be used if many different branch offices of a bank (identifying themselves with the same Business ID) report information on the same client and the amounts cannot be added together in a lump sum. In this example, the identity details to use would be codes for the branch offices involved. Similarly, other filers, not only banks, using one single Business ID must use identity details whenever the same client is included in more than one reporting items and a combined lump sum cannot be reported. If no branch office codes are readily available any combination of alphanumeric characters is acceptable. However, the required format of identity details consists of both numeric and alphabetic characters and must not include blankspaces.
